

New Corporate partner for Piper Alderman

Tuesday 23 September 2008

Piper Alderman is delighted to announce the expansion of its Corporate Division with the arrival of Melbourne partner John O'Callaghan.

John has over 20 years of experience advising clients on a broad range of commercial issues including risk management, contracts, dispute resolution, director's duties and trade practices.

He has a particular focus on the trade and transport industry and has been heavily involved in sports law having acted for a number of sporting organisations and individual sports persons on a range of issues. He is the author of "Sports Law Disputes" and in 2003 was awarded the Churchill Fellowship to travel to Europe and Canada to study the feasibility to establishing a sports court in Australia.

Piper Alderman Managing Partner Gordon Grieve comments on John's arrival:

"John joins us at an exciting time of growth for the firm and bolsters our already strong Corporate Division. He brings skills and experience that complement and enhance our existing team in Melbourne and across the nation."
